

Roy Cooper North Carolina Attorney General

NCDOJ Consumer Protection Grants

Review Process for Grant Applications

1. In the Initial Review Process (IRP) a program administrator will assess the eligibility of each application for funding consideration based on the application requirements. Eligible applications will then be assigned to evaluators for further review.
2. The Project Evaluation Committee (PEC) then will evaluate the merits of each eligible individual project proposal based on funding objectives and limitations, including a determination of applicant qualification, program sustainability, applicant's capacity to achieve stated goals, and overall projected program effectiveness. This committee is comprised of members of the Attorney General's staff from his executive team and Consumer Protection Division, and they will make recommendations to the Attorney General for further funding or non-funding consideration.
3. The Attorney General will consider PEC recommendations and make a final funding decision. The Attorney General has sole discretion in approving organizations for funding and may delegate decision making, defer selection pending further development of a proposal, select no organization for funding, or select one or more organizations for partial funding.
